Details of safety observation:	A pedestrian was crossing the road in front of my vehicle without checking for traffic in either direction, looking straight down, in front of their feet. In addition, the person's side vision was blocked by the head covering.
Immediate action taken:	As I was in the middle of the road, preparing to turn, once the pedestrian passes safely, the only immediate action I could take was to look in the rear view mirror to see if there were any cars behind, in case the pedestrian would be in a blind spot for them when moving towards my side of the road. Luckily, there were none. I also used this as a learning moment with the family: reminded my son of the importance of looking both ways when crossing the road.
